the library

The National Library of Wales is based in Aberystwyth. This impressive, classical building stands beside one of the UK's leading universities and enjoys dramatic views over the magnificent Cardigan Bay.

The Library

- preserves and makes available the Welsh cultural heritage by storing information about Wales and the Welsh people in whatever format and wherever it is produced in the world;
- provides world-class research facilities through its collections, which include a copy of virtually every publication produced in the UK in the last one hundred years.

It is our ambition to make sure that anyone who is interested in finding out more about Welsh history and Welsh culture can access that knowledge at any time and wherever they are in the world.

In practice this will mean that, in time, every newspaper and periodical ever published in Wales will be available to view on-line. It means that national treasures such as the Black Book of Carmarthen or the Laws of Hywel Dda or the Hengwrt Chaucer can be read as thoroughly as if you were leafing through the originals. A whole new insight into Wales - and our contribution to world knowledge - can be held up for the world to enjoy, in science and technology as well as in the arts.
